Not illustrated. 1873 Excerpt: .and hope expire, And horrors frown, A Wallace, mid her anguish dire, Half sav d the town. N His gold he gave with open hand, His time the poorest could command, And wise as brave, and good as grand, Sublime he stood Above the captains of the brand, The lords of blood. Mong noted northern chiefs of mind I never knew, nor can I find, A tongue or pen so much inclined, Whate er befall us, To labour bravely for mankind, As Doctor Wallace. My locks were dark as wing of night, Now at the half-way house to white, When first I heard him scorch and blight The drink unclean; And then, and now, his sword to smite Was swift and keen. He neither law nor logic spurns, But seeks the more inspiring urns, And tenderly and frank by turns, With fervent zeal, Makes Hebrew seer and poet Burns Assist him weel. The lute, when touch d with grace and skill, Will range from grave to gay at will, And melt or rouse, or soothe or thrill, With power and ease, Even so the man of genius still Can scourge or please, o Since first thy prentice student hand, With youth and fancy at command, Built up the pyramids so grand, And took the prize, Thy life has been one long expand--One constant rise. No gift in grandeur can transcen Thy Bible to the working men, --A golden mine from en to en Of bardic fire;...
